22/23 Nov 2021

The UAE50 Programme Conference will take place over two days and embrace a comprehensive agenda.

Centred around three main sessions, the conference will look closely at the past, present and future impact of the Constitution.

The opening session will look at the making of the Constitution from both the UAE and British aspects as well as the history and social structure of the Gulf States. The second session takes an analytical view, appraising the present status affecting society, government and the law, and reviews the nature, form and content of the Constitution.

Finally, the last session provides an overview of the Constitution for the future from an international perspective, addressing the issues to be confronted in the next fifty years.

With each session punctuated by open forums and a final summary session to close, the Conference promises to be of considerable interest to a large cross section of society including government, academia, educational establishments and businesses.
